Of course everybody in Washington knows that we give money back for all work not exactly right.

Some people wonder how we can afford to do it; they think half our business must be refunding money.

Not at all. Take our $8 teeth, for instance in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred we couldn't buy them back for ten times that amount. People don't give up good things so easily.

You are invited to come in and look at samples of our work and incidentally inspect the most complete dental office that money can procure.

THE ROMANCE OF A ROSE.

In the western part of Jefferson county, Florida, grows and blossoms into curious and magnificent beauty a rose that seems to be indigenous to a small area of country, but will not flourish in any other latitude. The bush is strong and vigorous and the leaves are very light but glossy green. The petals curve slightly inward and are the color of bright arterial blood. The odor is pungent and slightly sickening, resembling and yet unpleasant to a marked degree. The peculiarity of the rose is that the dew that drops therefrom is of a faint pinkish cast, a marvel seen in no other flower, and the hailing wonder of those who have witnessed it.

It is called the Grant rose, and it has a sad and melancholy history, which is told in the San Francisco Call. Its origin is one of the mysteries with which Nature at times delights to astonish her wandering devotees.

In 1834 John Grant and Nellie Lowrey were married. Soon after they selected as their future home a farm in Jefferson county, near the Aucilla river, and in the spring of 1835 a child was born to them. Soon after that the Seminoles went on the warpath. September 30, 1835, was an unusually warm day, and young Grant, having business at the country store, delayed his trip until the cool of the evening, when he mounted his horse and started off, expecting to return at about 2 a. m. He kissed his hand to his wife and the crying baby as he rode away. Six miles from home his horse stopped with a quick snort of fear and turned so violently that he was almost unseated. Supposing that he had been excited by some shadow of bush or briar, he urged on, but a clump of undergrowth near him became alive, and after a sharp, ringing sound and a puff of smoke, his horse, shot through the heart, trembled and fell under him. Before he had time to extricate himself the red fiends, with a war-whoop of diabolical triumph, were upon him. His scalp was taken by a savage and his warm body hung in the river.

One o'clock came and the young wife in the cabin put aside her sewing and listened intently for footsteps. The moon was hidden behind a bank of dense clouds, and a whisper of rain was hidden in the atmosphere. The yellow hound became restless and whined as he sniffed the air. Another hour passed and she was about to go to the door when a yell blundered her cheek. For a moment she stood helpless and trembling then, clasping her child, she raised a loose plank from the floor, dropped right through to the ground and crept into the woods. Soon afterward she saw the glare of the burning cabin. Her flight was discovered and she was overtaken about two miles from home. Two days afterward a party of hunters found the mother and the baby and buried them. Near by a little pool of blood had collected and had not been absorbed by the soil. In the spring the husband and father was found entangled in roots at the bottom of the river. A few years later a hunter, one of the party that had found the bodies, happened to be in the same locality, and on the spot where the blood had gathered he saw a vigorous bush bearing the rose that has been described. He cut some slips from it and took them to the settlement, where he related his discovery. Such a romantic and singular story excited the curiosity of many in the adjacent counties, and repeated efforts were made to secure a growth of the slips in other places, but failed of success. Within an area of five miles from the scene of the tragedy, it is said, the rose can be found, with its tall and sturdy stock, its pale green leaves, its incurved crimson petals and its bloody dew.

Big TREES.—The big-tree of California, is surpassed in size only by the eucalyptus of Australia, while the redwood may claim the honor of being the third largest tree in the world. The highest known redwood is 300 feet in height and twenty feet in diameter. The big-tree attains a greater diameter, but does not reach a proportionately greater height. Thus there are big-trees recorded having a diameter of forty-one feet, but we have seen none mentioned being over 400 feet in height. The height of the largest known eucalyptus tree is stated to be 470 feet, but the diameter is only twenty-seven feet. So while taller than the largest big-tree, in their proportions are the same, the California tree has about twice the bulk of the one which grows in Australia.—St. Nicholas.
